About me

I'm Ángel López Escolá, a UX/UI designer with a passion for tourism and marketing. I have a Master in Management and Planning from the University of Malaga, where I obtained an honors degree in my two research theses, one of them in collaboration with the Embassy of Japan in Spain.

For more than five years, I worked as a graphic designer both in web and print, carrying out projects for clients and suppliers from different sectors and countries. In addition, I was a travel coordinator for four and a half years, managing reservations, documentation, itineraries and assistance for organized trips to Europe, China and Japan. Thanks to these experiences, I developed skills in customer service, organization, communication and adaptation to multilingual environments. Recently, I obtained the Google UX Design Certificate, which allowed me to expand my knowledge and skills in this field. My goal is to apply my design, tourism and marketing skills to innovative and challenging projects that improve user experience and generate value for organizations.
